

AUTO THIEF HALTS WHEN SHOT PIERCES WINDSHIELD; FLYING GLASS CUTS THE BACK OF SUSPECT AS POLICE SHOOT

Fugitive Leads Officers Merry
Chase Along Bristol
Pike

IGNORED "STOP" ORDER

Caught After Nearly A Five-
Mile Chase Amid Pistol
Fire

An automobile thief narrowly escaped being shot Saturday night when he failed to halt at the command of Bristol police and continued to drive away at a furious rate in a stolen car.

The alleged thief: William Ricketts, 21, colored, Wood and Market streets.

Ricketts was held without bail for court today by Justice of Peace James Guy.

Ricketts was seen to drive off Mill street in the sedan of M. Kantor, which had been parked in the rear of the Kantor place of business, Mill and Pond street. Police were at once notified and Chief of Police Jones and Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo took up the chase.

Ricketts was picked up racing out the Bristol Pike and when at a point opposite the Paterson Parchment Works, Edgely, the police fired twice into the air as a warning for Ricketts to stop. The police siren had been screaming continually, but Ricketts kept on going.

Other shots were fired into the air but still the thief did not stop and when the high bridge over the Pennsylvania Railroad a Tullytown was reached, Chief Jones fired into the rear of the car. The bullet went directly through the rear window and through the windshield in front, narrowly missing the driver. This brought him to a stop.

Ricketts was brought back to police headquarters here and was found to be bleeding from glass which was imbedded in his back. A physician was summoned and removed the pieces of glass.

Ricketts took the car from the foot of Pond street at about 9.45 Saturday night. As he drove up the hill and on to Mill street, he was seen by one of the Kantor family, who immediately sounded the alarm.

According to the police, Ricketts has a record, and is considered a "bad" character.

"One shot went right by my car," said Ricketts. "I was only going for a ride and intended to come back."

High Temperature Drives
Bristol Folks To Beaches

The extremely high temperatures of yesterday and last night drove Bristol folks to the mountains, seashore resorts and to the various local bathing beaches, where relief was sought.

Many slept on porches last night and others sat at points where there appeared to be breezes.

The mercury flirted with the 100 mark all day and there was but slight relief until early this morning.

INDIAN EXHIBIT SHOWS SOME UNUSUAL FEATURES

Set-Up in State Museum at Harrisburg Shows Evolution of Tools

MANY ARE ATTRACTED

HARRISBURG, July 31.—(INS)—The Indian exhibit, as now set up in the Pennsylvania State Museum, has two features not carried out by any other museum in the country and which help greatly in the interpretation of Indian life.

These are the series of evolutions showing the tools, utensils, ornaments, etc., as they were fashioned step by step by the Indians, and the miniature models showing how these articles were used.

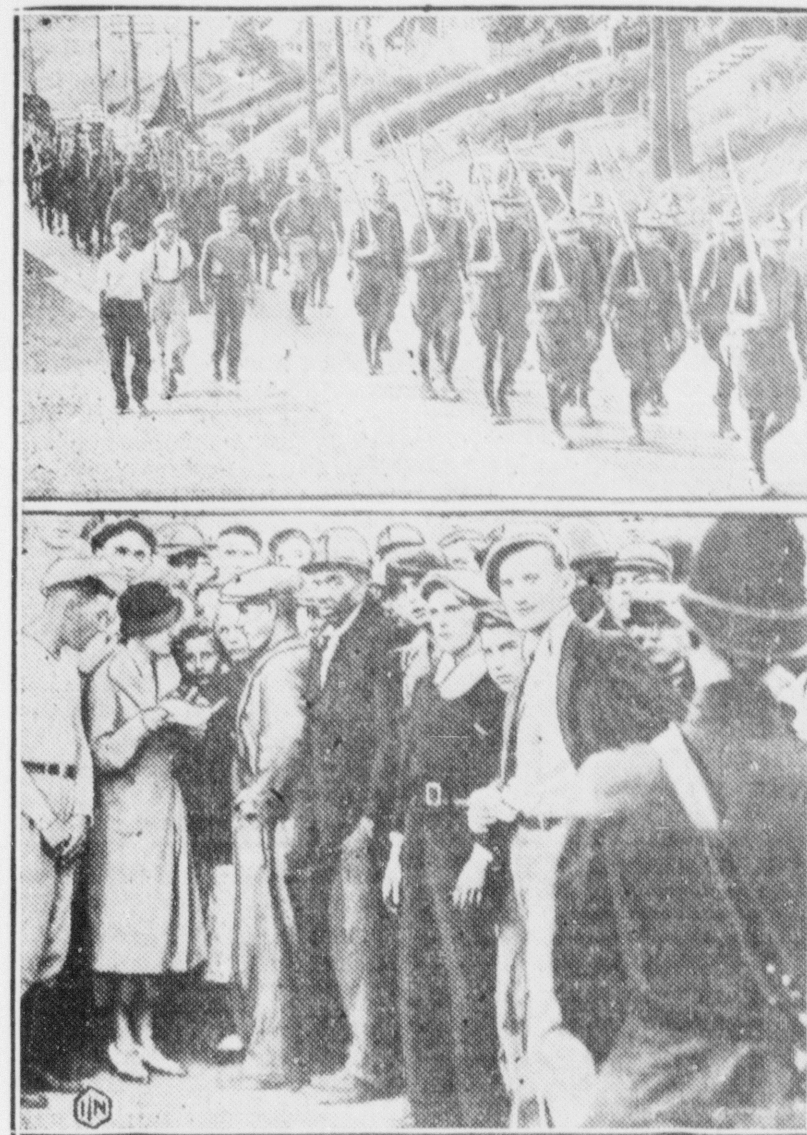

Visitors to the State Museum have shown unusual interest in the Indian model which was developed by Linneaus G. Duncan, chief preparator. This model visualizes a typical Susquehanna Indian village and is intended to show the home life, occupations, recreations and relationships of the aboriginal inhabitants of Pennsylvania.

The model shows the false face dance, one of the seasonal ceremonials conducted by the Algonquin Indians. Also, there is the interior of the palisaded village showing the bark houses, the caches to store food stuffs, squaws grinding corn, skin preparation, and the young Indians learning to use the bow and arrow. On the outside of the palisade, with the Susquehanna River forming the background, are corn and tobacco fields with a sentinel on guard, two prisoners being brought into camp, fishermen tying their boats laden with fish, an Indian bringing home a deer, and another at work making a dug-out.

The model leaves nothing to the imagination. The various cases which form part of the Indian exhibit are increasingly attracting visitors because they show the Indian artifacts not only in their various stages of development.

The suspects were taken to the Morrisville Barracks and will be given a hearing tomorrow morning.

Three people were injured in two automobile accidents in lower Bucks County yesterday. One woman was a resident of Edlington, while another couple was from Philadelphia.

WOMAN BLOWN TO BITS IN EXPLOSION OF AUTO

Identity Undetermined; Police
Think Case is One of Murder

MAKE SEARCH FOR MAN

PORTERSVILLE, Pa., July 31.—(INS)—A woman, apparently in her thirties, was literally blown to bits near here early today when the automobile in which she was sitting was blown to pieces by a terrific explosion.

State Police said they believed the case was one of murder and a search was started for a man who was heard talking beside the auto a few seconds before the explosion.

The scene of the blast was about three-quarters of a mile off the Perry highway on Bauder School Road, a one-way lane.

Windows in a farmhouse 100 yards away were shattered by the force of the blast. Residents of Portersville were awakened by the detonation.

There was no license on the wrecked auto.

Bits of cloth found scattered in the roadway indicated the woman had been wearing a polka dot dress. Her head was found in a field some distance from the car.

There was no indication as to whether she was alive or dead at the time of the explosion.

Colored Man Dies After Being Shot by State Police

Robert Perry, 30-year-old Negro, of Morrisville, who was shot through the right leg on Wednesday morning by Morrisville State Police when he sought to escape after raiding a chicken coop in Fallsington, died yesterday in Sellersville Hospital.

Dr. John J. Sweeney, Bucks County coroner, stated that Perry's death was the result of surgical shock. The victim's leg had been amputated in an attempt to save his life.

Trapped in a hen house on the property of Dr. W. A. Haines, Perry ran through a barrage of pistol fire in a desperate attempt to escape. He succeeded in eluding the Morrisville State Police only to be arrested several hours later by Chief Albert Cooper, of the Morrisville police, and Constable Thompson.

Perry was treated by a Morrisville physician following his arrest. The wound, however, failed to respond to treatment and the victim was removed to the Sellersville Hospital on Friday for treatment for gangrene.

MOTHER OF FIVE ENDS HER LIFE BY DROWNING

Body of Mrs. Florence De Camillo, 50, Found in Two Feet of Water

TRIED TWICE BEFORE

SOUTH LANGHORNE, July 31.—The body of Mrs. Florence DeCamillo, 50, Crescent avenue, was found floating in Neshamony Creek near here yesterday. The body was in about two feet of water where it flows past the farm of Charles J. Matthews.

It is believed the woman committed suicide.

William H. Urian, a guard at the House of Correction, Holmesburg, who has a bungalow along the creek, was canoeing at 8.30, when he saw the body. The woman was missed at six o'clock. Urian notified Constable Orville Morris, of Hulmeville, who summoned Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young, of Bristol, to view the body.

Authorities claim that Mrs. DeCamillo twice before tried to end her life. Members of her family missed her early yesterday morning. After failing to find her in her room a search of the nearby territory was made, but she could not be found. She had walked about a mile from her home to a lonely spot on the farm where she leaped into the water.

Mrs. DeCamillo's son, Joseph, fought in the ring under the name of Joe Camillo. She is also survived by four other children.

A meeting of the Furman A. C. will occur tonight in the Furman clubhouse, at 8.15. All members are asked to attend.

When Gross returned to his car he found that the door had been pried open and the contents taken. It was reported to the police and Chief Jones and his officers made a search of the neighborhood. One of the places searched was the residence of Mrs. Margaret Mauro. Mrs. Mauro denied that any of the loot was hidden in her home.

Saturday Chief Jones and Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo received information which again led them to suspect that those in the Mauro house knew something concerning the robbery of the car in December of last year.

The two officers went to the Mauro house and made a complete search of the place and recovered three rings, one locket, dresses and coats which Mrs. Mauro and her daughter admitted was part of the loot stolen from the car of Gross and placed in the Mauro house by Fred Lasparella and Albert Mancini and hidden under a trap door in the floor of the bath room. The loot was found in the Mauro garret on Saturday.

Mrs. Mauro also admitted that the clothing and jewelry were in her house when Chief Jones searched it but that she denied to him that anything was there.

A ring given by Raphline Mauro to a friend as a Christmas gift was identified by Newman as being his property. This ring was returned yesterday to the police.

Another ring sold by Mrs. Mauro for $2 to a friend was also returned and identified.

A trunk filled with wearing apparel has also been recovered.

Two Popular Players Are Stars in "Made On Broadway"

Two of the most popular players in pictures are co-starred in "Made on Broadway," which comes to the Grand screen starting tonight as a filmization of the Courtenay Terrett story, "Public Relations," account of a metropolitan "wise guy." They are Robert Montgomery, affable, expert at flip humor, and Sally Eilers, who sky-rocketed to stardom after her outstanding hit in "Bad Girl."

Montgomery, who was brought from the Broadway stage to play the part of an undergraduate in "So This is College," has since achieved a meteoric career in which he has played opposite such screen headliners as Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford and Tallulah Bankhead. In his newest picture he is said to have been given his greatest opportunity to put over the rapid-fire good humor which has endeared him to millions of moviegoers.

In "Made on Broadway," Montgomery has the role of a debonaire man-about-town who is actually the power behind the city's political scene. He prevents Miss Eilers from committing suicide as a result of poverty, and transforms her into a dazzling Broadway personality. When an unanticipated murder takes place Montgomery is forced to strain his resources to the limit in order to save his "synthetic mistress" from the death penalty.

Young Edison Aviator Is Slightly Hurt in A Crash

DOYLESTOWN, July 31.—A young aviator narrowly escaped serious injury when his biplane crashed 100 feet, struck a willow tree, and landed in a small creek. The pilot was "Bob" Swenson, 22, of Edison, who was alone in the craft. The machine landed in the rear of the Edison Dancing Academy.

Swenson took off from Pitcairn field and flew to Edison, where he was doing some stunts in the air. The plane was badly damaged when it crashed, the wings on the left side being wrecked.

A motorist rushed Swenson to Doylestown Emergency Hospital, where it was found that his injuries were not serious and included a few cuts about the head and chin.

AUGUST IN THE COUNTRY

Above the almost imperceptible hum of the season the locust is languorously buzzing. It is August. The ecstasy has gone out of things. The fledglings in one late nest of chirping sparrows keep up an intermittent chatter in the syringa bush under the window. But most of the neighborhood birds are foot-loose again. Bobolinks and orioles have been silent so long that you can hardly remember how gloriously they sang in May and June. But the song sparrow still keeps up his spirits, the Maryland yellowthroat still prattles of witcheries in the raspberry patch and sometimes the catbird has something sententious to say. Now that the swallows are hatched they are perching in long contemplative rows on the telegraph wires. The blue jay, who kept mighty quiet while his children were young, is beginning to trumpet and bluster again. In the morning and evening the blue-bird recovers his contralto warble of good-will.

The haze is fairly constant over the mountains, turning every view into a landscape, and lurks deep and blue in the valleys. In fields where the hay is still uncut, goldenrod, Queen Anne's lace and St. Johnswort begin to take full charge. The sun is a living ball of fire. If you cross a mown field the heat ripples up all around you; close your eyes and you have a sensation of rising. But it is cool and moist in the woods, and it is tranquil under the hemlocks. Where the sun leaks through the canopy of spires and branches it falls to the soft ground in pools of bluish light. For the light in hemlock groves is filtered; the glare and blaze are removed.

Anyone can understand that it is unnatural to work in such weather. Nature is making little effort now. There is no longer a sense of expectancy. All during the day there are long interludes of silence. The throb of a motor straining on the hill, the purr of a mowing-machine, a threatening "ho" flung at the horses in the hayfield a mile away, a dog's bark in some sleepy doorway are the only variations in the great symphony of quiet. Even the locust is no more than the season's overtone.

POLICE AND POLITENESS

The rule of courtesy in the relations of the police and the public should work both ways. Policemen should be knights of politeness. In turn the public should be courteous to the police and assist them in the performance of their duty. As the relationship between the police and the people is one of servant and master it behooves both to treat the other with consideration and respect. It is hardly necessary to warn the public against making verbal attacks upon the police. The policeman has every advantage over the citizen who arouses his displeasure. Protest is always ineffective, because the officer can protect his sensitive feelings under the guise of enforcing the law. It is the citizen who has no recourse from arbitrary or insulting conduct on the part of the policeman.

It is too much to expect policemen never to lose their heads, but it certainly isn't an unreasonable request to ask them to tell the individual wherein he or she has erred rather than tell the whole world.

It is easy to mistake ignorance for a good disposition.

Echoes of the Past---

By Louise White Watson

Bristol

Who doesn't know Bristol? The third oldest town and the second chartered borough in Pennsylvania—growing so rapidly in those long-ago years that it became a borough, November 14, 1729. But you know your borough and July, swaying in her summer glory, forbids dates. But time whispers, "One dare dream." Bristol has had her Red Man, her white man, followers of William Penn, between whom there was ever that bond of brotherhood. Bristol bristles as a manufacturing center; has sent her ferry-boats to and from the Jersey shore, so closely related when history touches the boundary and where enterprise reaches out in marching activity. She has placed her residential section in close touch to the historic Delaware, going down to the waters to greet it and commune with it. She has watched the farmers bringing in their produce, has watched her boats unloading at shore has heard the tooting of whistles, the swift approach and fast going of trains in their mad rush to terminals; has, dreamily, heard the tinkling of the slow-moving mules as they trod the tow-path that must have proved to them a monotonous going were it not that the seasons intervened and crowded into their routine much that was diverting. I used to feel a sympathy for the mules of the tow-path, but as the years go by, are we not many of us, plodding along another tow-path, reaching out, now and then, as do the mules, for the choice morsels that dot the way?

The Mine Mule

Over the radio one learned that in the few mines in which mules are still in evidence, there is a ruling that mules must be brought up from the depths at the close of the day's work and returned to their tasks in the morning. And Longfellow says, "It's always morning somewhere." Again, pleasure parties have brought back the slow-moving barges along the beautiful paths bestowed so generously by Nature and the mules themselves seem to have gained dignity in carrying the guests to picnic-land and home again.

Reminiscently

My first visit to this old borough that made an impression on me, was when I was sixteen. Were you ever sixteen? The sixteen that looks out over the world of delight? You teachers of past days, recall how it was the custom then for the county superintendent of schools to make his annual rounds, examining applicants for teachers' certificates. In our village it was a sort of gala day. Mr. Woodruff had a large class and visitors were many, some to "see how much our teachers really knew when put to the test." I, too, was a visitor for a time but on invitation of a friend, I accompanied him to Bristol where he had an appointment with a school director. We dined at one of Bristol's well-known hotels and my host busied himself in the preparation of a salad while seated at table. I watched his every move, a drop of this, a pinch of that, until I was drowsy. On completion he passed it to me with—I know—a mental flourish of accomplishment, and I—oh, sixteen, you saddened his day by saying, with no qualms whatever that you were infringing on Etiquette's ruling. "But I do not care for salad," I can recall his look yet, and I have never been able to analyze it twice the same way. Disapproval loomed as he said, "May I say that I think your taste needs cultivating?" And, Bristol, I committed that grievous error in your midst! Lady Etiquette gazed from one to the other and fled precipitately. Today salads and I have joined hands.

Another Memory

Different schools in lower Bucks were represented in Bristol for a spelling contest. I was one of the contestants. It rained. Mr. Hugh B. Eastburn, then county superintendent, kindly shared his umbrella with me. Elated? Well, bright sunshine shone inwardly through the downpour of rain. He remarked, something, I did not catch what, I was so high up in the clouds, but one of my feet landed unromantically into a puddle of water with a splash-dash that was telling. Mr. Eastburn said, "I cautioned you to beware of the pool. You could not have heard me. I am sorry, etc." Bristol, I shall tread carefully hereafter when in your midst.

One Day

Then there came a day when I again visited Bristol, this time as the guest of the Travel Club, where I gave a talk on "Penn's Pictures." It was a long time since my salad-days and I felt myself a stranger with but one or two exceptions. But the welcome extended to me by those Bristol ladies, and the delightful introduction accorded me by one of Bristol's charming hostesses, are memories that make music in the every-day trend of life. And the Delaware sang peacefully, understandingly. Bristol and I joined hands.

Music

Off yonder in the years, whoever dreamed that one spot in Bristol, leaning down lovingly to that beautiful river, would cause dreamers, the world over—those knowing the story—to live again with the music of the harps now long silent, in the historic Keene Mansion, built with love and wealth in 1816. One has stood at windows overlooking the river, has heard the approach of the barge, has seen the landing of one who, like Charlie in the song, "has come over the waters." With eagerness he mounts the few steps and is welcome. It is Joseph Bonaparte, ex-king of Spain, whose residence was in Bordentown, N. J. Can't you picture his coming? Coming down the river in his splendid barge, rowed by four oarsmen, carrying both the American and the French flags fore and aft? Has he grown to love this new country so different from the glamor of the old world? Does he grow a weary and long for his homeland? But his friendship with the "American Beauty," as Miss Keene was styled when on one of her visits abroad, when the king himself, once led her to the dance, must have brightened his exile, and in accepting the gracious hospitality of one of Bristol's queens, he must have become reconciled to the inevitable and lived again life's best as those beautiful hands swept softly the harp-strings.

Wiley Post Turns Actor as Winnie Mae Parades

The day following Wiley Post's public reception in New York, his famous plane, the "Winnie Mae," had a parade all its own as it was taken up Fifth Avenue to be exhibited at Radio City. The globe-girdler, now turned actor, is shown being greeted by "Roxie" and some of his gang as he appeared for his stage debut.

SYNOPSIS

Leni Luneska, beautiful motion picture star, is embarrassed at the premiere of her latest picture when her husband, Karl Kruger, whom she thought in prison, arrives and threatens to reveal his identity unless she talks with him. Lucky Cavanaugh, a gambler, prevents Kruger from making a scene and has him placed in a private office to await Leni after the show. In the next office, thieves are burglarizing the safe. Leni goes to Kruger. He demands recognition as her husband. She refuses but he says he will wait for her to reconsider. Cavanaugh, fascinated by Leni's beauty, follows her into the box. Finding her in tears he tries to comfort her and Leni is strangely strengthened by his hand-clasp. He takes her out for some air. Forced to confide in someone, she relates her past life: slaving in a Vienna factory—marriage to Kruger when only fourteen—beatings—Kruger's arrest—America—her gradual rise to stardom. Unable to resist, Cavanaugh kisses her. Later he goes to Kruger and insists that he leave, but the latter is defiant. A fight ensues. Kruger draws a revolver and Cavanaugh turns out the lights. Kruger empties his gun at Lucky but misses him. Then, in a fury, Kruger rushes through the door leading to the next office, surprising the robbers at work. A tongue of flame spurts from a burglar's automatic and Kruger drops—dead. Cavanaugh slips out of the office unnoticed, but on the stairs he meets Detective Tom Mulrooney. Cavanaugh knows Mulrooney will connect him with the murder when it is discovered. . . .

"Brace yourself for a shock," he said. "Your trouble with Kruger is all over."

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Just before he entered the box, Leni turned her head and saw him. A faintly discreet smile formed on her lips.

The smile said, "I'm glad you have come back to me. It is nice to have you right here, but I have not told Mr. Gates about you. I'm pretending you're a stranger till later."

Cavanaugh's imperative necessity was to tell her at once of Kruger's death.

He did not enter the box but retraced his steps again to the rear of the first floor where he found an usher—this time a genuine one. Fortunately it was the same youth who had procured him the seat in the box.

"Do you think you could do me another favor this evening," he asked the youth with his compelling touch of camaraderie.

The young man thought he could. Cavanaugh put a bank note in the lad's hand and went back to the box. Unostentatiously he found his seat. A few minutes later the usher was bending confidentially behind Douglas Gates and whispering in his ear.

"A long distance call has just come in for you, sir," he lied deferentially. "The operator has switched it into the booth in the men's lounge. The party said it was very important that we get you on the phone, sir."

The usher disappeared and thereafter kept out of sight. As Gates moved up the aisle, Cavanaugh spoke to Leni in a rapid hushed voice.

"Brace yourself for a shock," he said. His hand reached forward and closed above her elbow. "Your trouble with Kruger is all over. There was some sort of a hold-up in the front part of the theater a little while ago. Kruger got shot—accidentally. I had nothing to do with it myself."

Leni drew her breath in slowly over her teeth until her lungs were completely filled.

"Dead?"

"Yes. Don't let it rattle you. It's the break of a life-time for you—but you deserved it."

"It's terrible!" she uttered painfully.

"I'm hoping he didn't carry any papers that would link him up with you," Cavanaugh went on quickly.

"If he did, we'll move heaven and earth to keep it quiet. Don't want you to tell a living soul about Kruger—understand? Let me handle it my own way."

It was almost too much to expect that a woman under her strain could keep a cool head, yet Leni, by sheer force of will, compelled her brain to rational behavior.

"I'll keep silent," she agreed.

"Fine! There's only one had angle to it. I met a detective a little while ago back there. He found your handkerchief in the penthouse. It isn't important but if anybody starts asking us questions we'll simply tell the truth—leaving Kruger out of it. We didn't use a jimmy to get into the penthouse. Somebody had been there ahead of us and we merely entered through the French doors that were already opened. The cops will be so excited over what happened that Mulrooney probably will forget all about the penthouse business."

Cavanaugh could feel her beginning to tremble. "How much more of this can I stand?" she asked piteously.

"I'm sorry," he said steadily to her. "But you've got to go through with it. The worst part is over. I know you won't fall down now. Get yourself together. Show me how much heart you've got."

It was a command—a challenge and it entered into Leni's blood like strong medicine.

"Mr. Gates will be back in a minute," she said, forcing her voice to calmness.

"That's what I'm thinking about," said Cavanaugh. "We want to get rid of him—I'll take you home myself tonight."

"But how can we get rid of him?" asked Leni willingly.

Cavanaugh's eyes were alert and grinning.

"We're going to do something side door is still open and if we hurry we'll be gone before he gets back. If he telephones, you tell him you felt faint and some friends took you home. We'll dodge around the back and pick up a taxi."

Leni did not answer him. Merely, she rose to her feet—turned her back upon the audience and moved out of the box as Cavanaugh stood aside to give her precedence. The silken curtain swished together behind them. A very few steps and they stepped out through the side door into the fresher air of the arway.

Slug no longer was on guard in his inappropriate usher's uniform. However, another man was—a stocky man in a gray worsted suit. A man with a bristling red moustache and eyes as blue and clear as a child's.

Cavanaugh was not a man to show surprise or disappointment in an emergency. He was a gentleman among gamblers, and a gambler among gentlemen. And in his own individual way he had more poise than the professional practitioners of either class. If he was in the least startled by the annoying presence of Detective Mulrooney no one would have suspected it. A smile lit his face—he seemed actually glad to meet the man who was quite obviously barring his path. But it was all on the surface.

"Oh, hello, Mr. Mulrooney," he said pleasantly. "I'm just taking Miss Luneska home, Miss Luneska, this is Tom Mulrooney, the head man of our detective force here."

Mulrooney bowed a little stiffly to Leni.

"You're perfectly right about me being head man of the detective force here," he said, "but you're wrong about just taking Miss Luneska home. Both of you are going to spend a little time with me answering questions. We just found a safe popped open and a dead man upstairs. It must have happened while you both were in the vicinity."

Why did you buy this NEWSPAPER?

SUPPOSING that, beginning tomorrow, all the newspapers are discontinued. What a furor the public would make. "News! News! We must have news or we will be no better off than the ancients." All right, suppose we give them news but cut out the advertisements.

Then you would discover that politics, the doings of society, notices of fires, accidents, deaths, scandals, sports, the activities of the police and criminals add little or nothing to the real comfort and happiness of this greatest age in the world's history.

Advertising is the NEWS of all the looms, of all the furnaces, of all the laboratories, of all the shops, of all the stores, of all the world, and all working for you.

Because of advertising, luxuries and necessities that once cost a king's ransom are yours at little prices. Advertising pits merchant against merchant, artisan against artisan, producer against producer, for your benefit, forcing out the best there is in everything and telling the world about it.

Read advertising. Keep abreast of today. Advertising furnishes you with facts and opportunities that otherwise you would never know.

It pays to read all advertisements in this paper

FALL DRESS STYLES DESIGNED OF EXTRA HEAVY "SILK" GOODS

By Alice Langelier (L. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS—(INS)—Artificial silk is a runner-up for first fall fashions coming from the chic Paris dressmakers. Whether it is only one of the many consequences of the unfortunate, long-lasting depression which is making itself very much felt on this side of the salty pond as well, or a promising break for American silk manufacturers, none seem to know.

Nevertheless, artificial silk is going to be seen on every smart woman this winter. It's the heaviest variety made, perfect for draping purposes and of the richest and rarest hues. Better than all, it's absolutely uncrushable, so what woman could possibly resist?

All the designers are using it behind closed and sealed doors just now, for next season's secrets really won't be known before a few weeks. Suffice one to say, however, that Schiaparelli has it in the most wonderful shade of blue, a new tone never seen before. And Worth has chosen it in brown, a new brown of course, which he believes will be the coming shade of the winter.

There is also a new silk which looks very much like the bark of a tree, with rough and uneven surface which catches the lights and shadows in a marvelous manner. It is certain to be a fall favorite that will last all through the winter.

EMILIE A. A. WINS
EIGHTH STRAIGHT GAME

With Vic Rockhill leading the attack, Emilie A. A. chalked up its eighth consecutive win on the Emilie field yesterday afternoon, trimming the Towanda A. A., 8-2. Rockhill connected for a single, double, triple and home run in four trips to the plate.

The winners made twelve hits from the delivery of the losing hurler, Teevell. The Towanda team amassed seven hits off Emilie's star pitcher, "Ike" Watson. The leaders in the visitors' attack were O'Hara and Burns.

"Billy" Leigh played snappy outfield for the winners while the Towanda keystone combinations, Pearlman to Burns to Holt worked two fast double-plays.

On St. Ann's field yesterday afternoon, Washington A. C. lost its independent crown championship to the Young Italians, 11-6. The Young Italians earlier in the season had dropped a decision to the Washington team and now the series is tied at one each.

"Corkey" Narcisi avenged his early defeat by holding the Washington team to six hits, two of these going to Tony DiBlassio. The Young Italian stars were "Lefty" DiTanna and "Bud" Tulio. DiTanna made two nice catches in centerfield and scored four runs while Tulio had two doubles and a single to his credit.

Indian Exhibit Shows
Some Unusual Features

The miniatures are an added attraction because they show in each case how these artifacts were used. Among the evolutions are those of the arrow and spearhead, the celt, hammer and hammer stones, axes and tomahawks, mortars, pestles, hoes, pottery, etc.

The display of pottery from Indian graves in different sections of the state, but largely from Lancaster County, is an unusual one containing more than two hundred pots of all sizes—not any two alike. Not the least interesting of this collection is the case featuring the different steps in the making of a pottery vessel from the selection of the clay and the breaking of the shells to temper the pot, to the finished decorated vessel.

In the same case on the middle shelf is shown the evolution of a comb from the rough bone to the finished article. On the shelf below, the evolutions of a fish hook and of a harpoon are displayed in a similar way. Equally interesting is the trader material case, showing the different types of materials exchanged by the Indian and the white man. Two miniature figures give it realism—the one, a white man giving a gun; the other, an Indian giving furs in return.

Another striking feature of the Indian Exhibit is the arrangement of artifacts representing the different sections of Pennsylvania and contrasting Susquehannock and Iroquoian Indian culture. Various characteristics of celts, knives, arrowheads, etc., of each tribe are depicted in these cases, closely related to the Indian artifacts is the case containing the Charles Wakefield Cadman music manuscripts included in which are the original penciled notes of his Indian opera, Shanewis, with its 37 Indian themes.
